MONDAY, February 18th, 1745. [Numb. 569.]

Mr. Timothy,

IN Answer to the Extracts from the Christian History, &c inserted in your last, if you'll afford a Place in your next Gazette, for the Extracts I herewith send you from the Boston Evening Post, (No. 492) you'll oblige, not your frantick, but all your Rational Readers, and in particular

Your most humble Servant, &c.

To the Publisher of the BOSTON EVENING POST.

SIR, Boston Jan 9, 1744,5.

THE Gentlemen, who love to be tho't friends to what they call the late happy revival of Religion, begin to skulk in the dark, as being afraid to own themselves to be the Authors of what they publish to the world; tho' in defence of the very cause their hearts seem so much set upon An instance of this we had in yesterday's Gazette. The Gentleman appears sufficiently alarm'd; and yet could not muster courage enough to let the world know who he was. His character, if we may judge by his performance, is not very great. I hope the friends of Mr. Whitefield will engage some abler hand in his cause; if they don't, it will soon come to nothing. The Gentleman, indeed, seems himself to be in expectation, that something better will be done, than he was capable of effecting. 'I 'doubt not, says he, but the ministers of 'Boston can render a sufficient reason, for 'their affectionate reception of Mr W—d' Many I know, would greatly rejoice to hear their reason, that they might judge of its sufficiency; tho' they much doubt their ability to render a reason that will bear examination, and fear they will never make the attempt. He expects, 'they 'will soon return an answer to the Country Clergymen's Letter.' But he may depend upon being disappointed; and for this weighty reason, among others, because 'tis not capable of an answer: And I believe they themselves think so. He goes on to prophesy what kind of answer it will be; 'such an one as will afford 'satisfaction, at least, to those who have 'any respect for the late surprising work of 'God in the land' He was wise to confine his expected satisfaction to those who are satisfied already: And he did well to say, the late surprising work; for there is nothing surprising now, unless it be the infatuation of some Ministers as well as people, in glorying in a Man, and having his person in admiration, who, by his uncharitable, slanderous, enthusiastical conduct, under the vain pretence of extraordinary sanctity, has been the occasion of filling the country with contention and confusion, beyond what was ever known from its first settlement We are now come to some feeble essay of his own, wherein he suggesteth, that those associated Ministers aimed at the disparagement of the work, thro' Mr W—d.' They had no need, I am sure, to set themselves to disparage a work, which carries with it, whenever it appears, all the marks of disparagement. That which has been so often called in the gross, and without distinction, the work, the good work, the surprising work, is a perfect mess-medly of all kinds of disorder and error, enthusiastic wildness & extravagance; and as such has been publickly lamented by the best friends to religion in the country, on both sides of the present controversy. But how comes the Gentleman to say, 'they aimed at disparaging the work?' Is not their Letter evidently pointed at the conduct of the Boston ministers in admitting Mr W—d into their pulpits? Don't they keep close to this design? An't all their arguments directed to this point, and with such strength as must convince all who an't under the power of prejudice? And if they have drop'd any thing that may have an aspect on the work, is it any other than occasionally, and as they were led to it in pursuit of their main design, which was to represent the absurdity of an affectionate reception of the man, who has been the disturber of our Israel? The true reason of this suggestion was not, that the associated ministers had given any just ground for it, but the Gentleman could not, without this previous surmise of his own brain, have proposed the printing 'the names of those worthy ministers who 'have borne explicit and honourable testi- 'mony to the work;' nor have inserted at the close such a long list of them, to impose on poor weak people: I say impose on them; for this writer knows, if he an't perfectly ignorant of the state of things in the land, that a much more pompous list of names, both for number and weight, might be easily printed on the other side of the question, and without seeking for them at such a vast distance He has ransack'd no less than six or seven provinces meerly to aggrandize his list with numbers. 'Tis pity he has not taken in all the friends to the good work in England, Scotland and Ireland: His list would then have made a much more showy appearance. And to make a show, and by this means to amuse the common people, was all he could aim at; tho' in order to compass this poor low design, he has got together a mixture of men of all kinds of Characters, wild Enthusiasts, encouragers of separations, promoters of errors and disorders, and known to be so, either by their own confession, or the judgment of the councils which condemned them And rather than not have a large list, he has put down the names of some who are both dead and rotten; nay, he has inserted the names of some of the rankest opposers of the good work in the whole land; and this, according to his own declaration, however inconsistent with himself. For 'tis observable, some of the persons whose names are inserted, under the character of worthy ministers who have borne an explicit and honourable testimony the work, are the very Gentlemen whose Letter and Advice awakened this writer to take all this pains to bear down opposers; and they are also among those who have seen, and intimately known the rise and progress of things in the late times, and therefore what they have done must, by this Gentleman's own confession, impress the minds of all candid people with infinitely more force, than if they had stood at a distance, and not acquainted themselves with the state of affairs in the land.

The Insinuation as tho' the Enemies to the Confusions of the present Day were all by the lump opposers of the Work and Dispensations of Grace, is like some other vile abuses which have been offered at random to the best men we have in the Country I doubt not the friends to the good work would make a bitter outcry, if they were represented as a parcel of Hypocrites and Enthusiasts; and yet, I have no reason to think but the charge would be equally just.

I would add, 'tis not only 'whispered 'about, that the doctrines of grace and ex- 'perimental piety are a sinking cause' but this is the real truth, and owing principally to that ridiculous light in which religion has been placed by the most noted instruments in the production of what this Gentleman calls the late surprising work of God's grace: And it may be expected, that, instead of the power of godliness, Quakerism and Infidelity will over run the land, if men of an enthusiastic Turn of Mind are not kept out of our pulpits

Anti Enthusiasticus.

CHARLES TOWN, Feb 18.

Last Thursday the celebrated Mr. Thomas Bell, otherwise called TOM BELL, &c (so well known thro' all the Colonies and most of the Islands, by his Actions for several Years past under fictitious Names, was committed to the Work-House in this Town, as a Vagabond. He was detected and secur'd by the Honourable Edmond Atkin, Esq; having (after several Attempts for that Purpose) introduced himself to that Gentleman, at his House on Wando Neck, as a Native of this Province going to Goose Creek, and at last assum'd the Name of Nathaniel Mott. Mr. Atkin, in coming to Town, instead of landing Mr. Bell on Daniel's Island as he expected, brought him to this Town; and as a great Concourse of People daily flocks to see him, no doubt the further Execution of his Schemes in this Province will be hereby defeated.

By a Vessel from Providence, we have Advice, that a small Privateer from that Place, with 19 Men, Capt. Richard Thompson, Commander, has taken and brought in there a Spanish Vessel from the Havanna bound to St Augustine, with the Pay for that Garrison; 47,000 Pieces of Eight were already found, a large Quantity of Goods, &c.

Yesterday arrived in Rebellion Road, a Rhode Island Privateer, commanded by Jennings.

Last Friday Night we had a great deal of Lightning, Thunder, Wind and Rain; The Lightning struck the House of Mr. Emanuel Smith in King street, wherein the Rev Mr Gillebrift lives, and has done considerable Damage.
